How to Set up a Show Pig Pen

Building the correct pen for your show pig is highly important in ensuring your pig is comfortable and had the necessities to perform throughout the year. In the video below, you'll hear tips from Josh Brockman on how to set up a concrete pen. However, if you have a dirt area or will be building your pen on another surface, this is still how your pen should be set up but the bedding may need to be different.

Pen Size

You need to make sure you have enough room for your pig to move around and be comfortable, but an excessively large pen will allow your pig to potentially injure themselves. We suggest pens should be 10'x6' and at least 3' tall. The sides can be made from pig panels, plywood or another similar material. The key is to make sure there aren't gaps where you pig an escape or injure themselves.

Bedding

Comfortable and absorbent bedding are key. White pine shavings work well because they are absorbent and provide the appropriate cushion on a concrete floor. There should be enough shavings that your pig is not walking on bare concrete. However, leaving the space in front of the feeder bare will help keep your pig's toes even.

Feeder Placement

As your pig grows, you are going to need to adjust the height of your feeder so your pig can eat comfortably. To ensure the feeder is always the right height, we like to use hanging clip on feeders. Also, by placing them at the front of the pen, you can easily reach over the panels to feed your pig. A good rule of thumb is the bottom of the feeder should be just below your pig's chest.

Water

Fresh water is the most important nutrient for your pig, so it must be accessible at all times. There are lots of options in terms of the water you selection. The most important fact is that the water is clean and available at all times. Just like your feeder, it is best if you can place the water close to the front of the pen, away from where your pig sleeps so that area stays dry.

Ideal Show Stick Length

The ideal show stick length is not a kept secret, yet so many seem to make the mistake of buying the wrong size. Why do they make that mistake? Simple, the choice they've made perfectly logical. Here's the trick...show stick length is more about the size of the cattle than the showman... most of the time. Particularly when the showman is little.

You're at a show, standing in front of the supply trailer while looking at the mass of show sticks all wrapped in plastic. Next, you think, "I don't even know where to start." I've seen this process many times while waiting to grab a can of paint or glue. It can be daunting, mainly because many parents are unsure of what size or color to bring back to the stalls.

Picture this 9-year-old little blonde headed girl showing her Hereford heifer. We have all seen her. She's in the show ring, just cute as a button. Someone has meticulously braided her hair, she's wearing a cute little sweater, pressed jeans and cute little boots. Her number harness has been adjusted to fit her skinny little frame, not an easy task by the way. In short, she is put together and out there to do her best. Her heifer, while a little stubborn because she's a Hereford, is perfectly behaved for her. All the details have been considered, right down to her cute little show stick. Wait...What? Cute little show stick? That's where it all falls apart.

What we haven't addressed it is the fact that her heifer is a Fall yearling that our little girl is showing in the Spring. Of course when our little blonde showman got this heifer, that show stick seemed right and honestly it worked okay because everyone was little.

But as they'll do, the heifer started growing and left her little showman behind in her 70-pound frame. Still don't see the problem? Let's go back to the show ring. They are in line and our little gal has been trained at home so she knows she needs to get the show side hind leg back. She leans and stretches in order to reach that leg with her show stick that is too short. As she does that, she pulls the heifer's head with her.

Best case scenario, it's just an unattractive picture to have the heifer's head pulled around to the little girl while she reaches for that leg. Worst case is that the heifer responds to her showman and moves because the heifer knows that if her head is pulled in a direction...we go that direction. Most likely she either steps her front end out of line or swings her hip out of line. Either way, we've set this little showman up for unnecessary frustration.

A show stick for any given showman should be long enough that they can comfortably reach the hind legs of the cattle they are showing. Our boys haven't ever shown with a stick smaller than a large. Agreed, it is a little unwieldy at first, but like dragging around a 1000-pound animal, they adjust to what they are given. Realistically, when they are little they may not even hold on to the rubber handle part of the stick while scratching.

Like a baseball bat, when they are little, they just have to choke up. In fact, as they choke up on the stick, it balances the weight more, making it easier to manage. I like the carbon fiber sticks for the simple fact that you can get significant additional length in a stick with a nominal addition in weight.

Perhaps worse than frustrating our little blonde showman is the awkward picture of a stout young man showing with a medium sized show stick. Gosh, I hate to quote Tommy Boy, but I can't shake the comparison of "fat man in a little coat." Even if he is a basketball player with arms long enough to reach with that little stick, he just looks funny. That boy needs an extra-large show stick. Mom and Dad, please go get him a new stick!

I'm 6' and I always show with an extra-large stick. I'm certain that so many small and medium sticks are sold because it seems logical when we get them "cute little" of everything else, it stands to reason that the stick is the same. ~~Not the case. Hopefully, there won't be such a run on larger sticks that they'll be sold out of larger the next time I need to replace one for the kids!~~

No matter how few or many show animals you have on feed, at some point or another you'll need the help from a veterinarian. In some cases this assistance maybe in medicine to treat a sick animal or as simple as getting health papers on your animals to go to a show. Regardless, building a relationship with a veterinarian is one of the most important connections to improving your success showing livestock.

For a first time exhibitors it can sometimes be intimidating to walk in and meet your local veterinarian. You may also not know where your local veterinarian office is located. The best advice is to ask a breeder close to you who they recommend. Your county extension agent or ag teacher should also be able to point you in the right direction. If you are lucky you might have multiple veterinarians in your area and you'll want to determine which one works with show livestock most frequently.

It is also very important to start working with your veterinarian early on in your project. "The primary reason for a livestock exhibitor to have a good relationship with a veterinarian is that in order to prescribe and treat animals there must legally be a client-patient-veterinarian relationship," says Dr. Jimmy Gleason, DVM. By forming a relation with your veterinarian early they will also be more familiar with your project in case you do find yourself in an emergency situation.

Also, remember your veterinarian is there to help. Don't be afraid to ask questions about little things you notice that maybe the start of a health issue. More times than not, this will lead to heading off a sickness. Preventative care and a good nutrition program are the best bet to keeping your project on the right on track.
