The fall sniffles. They are real for humans, dogs, cattle and swine. Take the day to night temperature fluctuations and add the stress of weaning, transitioning to new environments, feed regimens and being with new people and routines and that is a lot for a young animal. It's no wonder that one of the most anticipated times of year becomes a time of worrying about the health and well-being of new show prospects.

Temperature swings are perhaps the biggest culprits of fall sicknesses. Some signs and symptoms to look for are runny noses, downed ears and heads and animals that simply hang off by themselves. Excessive panting or animals that quit eating are signs of an animal that is not feeling well. If you want to take your animal's temperature, make sure to have a thermometer on hand and know what a normal range is for your species.

Bloat is another common ailment to look for with feed changes and stress. Watch for animals that look uncomfortable and are excessively full in their appearance. They need to be treated immediately. The best way to treat bloat is to drench them with mineral oil or release the gas build up with a hose and then drench with mineral oil or a combination of baking soda and water.

An Ounce of Prevention

Being proactive is the best approach to keeping your new show livestock healthy. Make sure to vaccinate calves for BRD and respiratory diseases. Any pig projects need to be vaccinated for Circo, Mico, PRRS and the flu. Practice parasite control with dewormers. And make sure to keep a watchful eye on any symptoms of illness that might occur.

When it comes to preventing bloat, make sure your ruminants like cattle, sheep and goats have plenty of hay in their daily diet. Also, as an added measure, you might want to add sodium bicarbonate or simply baking soda to their feed to keep their rumen in check.

Finally, make sure your livestock always have clean, fresh, cool water. One way to keep your animals eating and drinking is to add a dose of Vita Charge® Liquid Boost® to their water, especially during times of stress like the fall weather changes or transitions to new environments. Vita Charge Liquid Boost contains Amaferm® and MOS to support the ability to recover from the effects of stress. Amaferm is a precision prebiotic that combats stress resulting in increased intake, nutrient digestion and absorption. MOS traps bad bacteria limiting their ability to do harm. This supplement also includes organic Zinc, the antioxidant Vitamin E and B vitamins.

Keep on Hand

Regardless of how much you try to prevent the fall sniffles, you are bound to have a sick animal or two. Keep some supplies on hand for when you need to treat an animal. Be sure to have a thermometer, antibiotics, clean needles and syringes, a drench gun and the phone number to a trusted veterinarian.

Always read and follow label directions. If you are unsure of how to treat an animal, call your vet or a trusted mentor for advice. It is always a good idea to build a relationship with a veterinarian before you have a sick animal.

The fall sniffles. They are inevitable. With some proactive measures, some good prevention with Vita Charge and a good vaccination program, you should be able to prevent too many sniffles before they become a major sickness.

There is no doubt that showmanship can make or break your success in the show ring. One of the main principles of showing well is how and where to use your whip on your show pig. It is important that you focus on these four key points:

1. Keep a firm grip!

It is important to keep a firm grip on your whip. Use your index finger and thumb to apply pressure. Never hold your whip like a pencil.

2. The “Go Button” is on the side.

Judges like to see your pig move at a good steady pace, so it is important to know how to make your pig move. To ask your pig to walk you need to find the go button, which is between their shoulder and flank. Never hit your pig on the butt, hocks or head to get them to ask them to move. The go button is on the side.

3. Use the guidance system to turn.

To get your pig to turn you want to tap on the opposite side that you are asking them to move. Tap on the on the right side of the head to go left, and the left side to go right.

4. Head Up!

Finally, to maximize your pigs presence in the show ring you will want them to keep their head up. Use the quick of your whip underneath their chin to get their head up. All pigs will respond different, and practice makes perfect.

The purple banner. It's every showman's goal to walk out of the show ring with the royal purple banner, the sign of a champion. But that banner isn't given freely. It takes work, dedication and the knowledge and effort of a proper nutrition and exercise regimen.

In Dayton, Pa., there is a 13-year-old who has been successful in the show ring with her livestock projects, and she also spends countless hours in the barn working with and caring for her animals. McKenzie Stadtmiller has been showing lambs since she was just 4-years-old and knows the work and dedication it takes to drive a champion. She showed the Grand Champion Market Lamb at the 2018 Pennsylvania Farm Show. She recently added goats to her mix of livestock, and said exercise is an important part of getting her animals ready for the ring. McKenzie doesn't exercise her lambs and goats all alone as she has a four-legged personal trainer, a Border Collie appropriately named Banner.

"When she was younger we used to call Kenzie our little banner chaser, and then when we got the dog, her name was already Banner! It was pretty neat," said Tiffani Stadtmiller, McKenzie's mom.

Banner is a trained "track" dog, and McKenzie uses her to exercise both her lambs and goats as they start getting heavier. The Stadtmiller family built an oval track that is just wide enough for two animals at a time. Banner will bark and chase the animals around the track, converting fat into lean muscle shape in both lambs and goats.

McKenzie said she starts tracking her lambs when they are about 100 pounds; goats at about 50 pounds, but she said the key is to make sure they have some fat on their body to convert.

"Whenever we start tracking we like them a little fat, so we're just working off the fat and gaining muscle. If one gets too fat, we'll back down their feed or track them a little harder just to keep their overall shape. We like Sure Champ® Climate Control a lot so if it does get really hot out, we'll give them some of that before we run, to help with stress," McKenzie said. Once they start tracking their animals, they go slow at first to let the lambs and goats get used to the process, Banner and her barks. They might only make a lap or two the first few times they track. Once the lambs get accustomed to their exercise program, they require the lambs to make three "fast laps" before they are caught and walked back into the barn and cooled off before their nightly feeding. McKenzie said it takes about four minutes to make a run on a pair of animals, as all animals are run two at a time.

Tracking works for McKenzie's lambs most of the year since she starts showing in mid-May and will show into January at the Pennsylvania Farm Show. She said she will track even into the weather, as it is still safe for the lambs and Banner. She will clean snow off the track if needed, and if it isn't icy, they will still track. , she will walk her lambs in the barn, so they still get some form of exercise.

Tracking is just one form of exercise for lambs and goats. It is safe for the animals, and is widely accepted across the U.S. Many exhibitors have adopted this form of exercise in the last decade, and the dogs that are used are trained to not actually nip at the animals but to bark and cause excitement to get them to run.

Other methods that lamb exhibitors might use include a tread mill; walking machine – think of round carousels like a horse uses; walking them in groups behind an ATV; or running them loose in a grassy area. All exercise methods are safe for the lambs. The benefit of tracking for the Stadtmiller family is that they can exercise multiple lambs in a relatively short period of time. For example, most people "run" their lambs for 30 minutes a day on a treadmill. For six lambs, that is three hours of time. With tracking, they run 2 lambs at a time for 5 minutes or less, they can be finished in less than 30 minutes, including the time it takes to walk them between the barn and to the track.

McKenzie might not be that "little banner chaser" anymore, even though she has worked hard to collect several already during her show career. With the help of her own track dog, Banner, she is realizing her dreams, following her passion and learning a love of livestock, one lamb at a time.

Formula for Show Pig Success Includes Starting Slow

Show pig success is dependent on a variety of factors, from daily care to presentation, to quality of project and beyond.

Perhaps one of the most challenging factors of show pig success is nutrition - feeding the project animal through to show day. And, it's not an easy task when the desired look for pigs is changing. Judges are starting to look for pigs that are both fresh and fat enough, but also have shape, are not overly full, and are tall and clean-fronted.

This transition is shifting how we as exhibitors think about nutrition. Historically, the focus has been on meeting certain weights and feeding a certain product once that weight is achieved, but I encourage people to think about show pig nutrition another way - soundness and fat cover.

Instead of the old thought process of - 'when they're 25 pounds, feed this, and when they're 100 pounds, feed that' - really focus your strategy on feeding for soundness and fat cover.

Using nutrition to impact show pig soundness

Lessons learned in the steer ring can be applied to show pigs.

For example, steers almost two years old are winning shows because they've been bred to be so extreme. By growing these cattle slow, it can be possible to manipulate structure. This same philosophy can be applied to pigs.

Similar to steers wanting to bow their legs, getting a little straight in their leg or not quite hitting their stride - the same can be impacted on the pig side.

By managing diets, we can attempt to control how an animal walks. Then, once they get to a certain size, you can mass them up, and they'll still walk soundly; but, the key is to go slow and steady on nutrition.

Feeding for fat cover

Shoot for pigs to be 150 pounds, or pretty close at 60 days out from the show. Then aim for them to be about 200 pounds at 30 days out. From there, every decision made is related to soundness, fat cover or both.

For an average to good muscled pig, start with a bag of 20% protein feed, then transition to an 18% protein feed. For a heavy muscled or harder made pig, a 20% protein feed transitioning to a 16% protein feed.

A variety of show supplements exist to further modify appearance. For more fat cover, high fat supplements can be added to the diet. For additional shape and expression of muscle, supplements with extra protein can be added, and for extra body and fill a high fiber supplement can be added.

The biggest mistake I see people make is feeding too high of protein and too much feed early on. Pigs can get too massed up early in life and end up with structural problems. Start slow, don't feed too hard, too early and keep an eye on the protein level.
